CLASS SUPPER AT GODDARD.

The usual custom of the class supper at Goddard was carried out last evening in a manner most charming. The faculty seemed to have a faculty of giving Goddard's graduating class a very good remembrance of their teachers. The supper was held in the dining hall, which was very prettily decorated. The table had the form of a cross and flowers were in abundance.

The supper itself was the best that could be ordered, too heavy for a lunch and a little too light for a dinner. It was just right.

goff, Courier to the Czar." Miss Brown gave her recitation in a very creditable manner. Her voice was clear, her gestures were good, and she received loud applause. This speaker received the second honor for scholarship during her conrse of study. Her selection in part was as follows:

Michael Strogoff, Courier to the Czar.

Russia was threatened by a Tartar invasion. The commander of the Russian troops was the Czar's brother, the Grand Duke, now stationed at Irkutsk. Suddenly all communications were eut off between him and the Czar by the enemy under Ivan Ogareff, a traitor who had sworn to betray Russia and kill the Grand Duke. It became necessary to send a messenger to warn him of his danger and Michael was chosen for that purpose. He was brought before the Czar and questioned.

The Czar handed him a letter which he was to deliver to the Grand Duke at Irkutsk. He was warned to evade the Tartars. Upon it depended all Siberia, and perhaps the life of the Grand Duke.

When he got to Omsk he stopped to eat his dinner. As he was about to leave the piace he heard a cry "My son." He looked and saw his mother but would not recognize her, as this would endanger his life and mission. Ogareff, however, heard of the occurreme and succeeded in arresting Michsel and both he and his mother were brought before Ogareff. His mother

Practical Aims.

On occasions like this it is usual to impress upon young people the import- capitals of Europe; he defeated the ance of high ideals. They are told to aim high, to watch the rainbow of promise, to seek its treasures of gold, o "hitch their wagon to a star" and the like. These admonitions have their use. They are sometimes the source of . inspiration and effort that have a formative effect upon the character and career. The treasure of gold may never be found, and the star may prove to be a more refractory animal than a mule; yet the attempt may serves to define a purpose, and envelop a strenght for its execution. I wish to direct your attention to those of a lower order, by this I do not wish to be understood to mean anything immoral or vulgar. Perhaps the term practical aims would be a suitable nomnation for my theme.
